Public Art & Commercial Buildings

James Piercey created this ten foot by five foot glass wall in 1994 as a dividing wall between the reception desk at the entrance to the building and the hallway behind it. It is titled 20 M.E.V. reflecting the artist's interpretation of a negatively charged particle being projected by the 20 million electron volt linear accelerator at this radiation therapy location. This radiation penetrates layers of stratified squamous epithelium to strike a target cancer cell with concomitant tissue damage² explains Mr. Piercey (using his pre-med background). The clear glass/mosaic/etched assemblage has little color but is designed to sparkle and is translucent for the privacy of those in the hallway.
